Principles of Prevention and Control of Infection

The control and prevention of infection plays an important role in the infrastructure of the healthcare system. An estimated 300,000 patients a year acquire some form of healthcare-related infection. Our nationally recognised qualification is designed to provide an understanding of the importance of prevention and control of infection and, on achievement, evidences that the learner has fully understood these key principles.

The qualification looks at the knowledge and understanding of the key principles of prevention and control of infections. Upon successful completion learners are awarded the Certificate in Principles of the Prevention and Control of Infection.
